THE CALL

Worth a first meeting. Not an investment on this evidence. The mechanism is the best answer anyone has given to why factory-built housing keeps failing here: bring a small robot to the lot instead of building a plant and trucking the house. But twenty months into the rebuild that created its market, the record shows two finished backyard units and no finished house, and the pipeline figure has been restated four times in four different units.

WHAT IT RESTS ON

- The mechanism genuinely dodges the two costs that killed Kattera, Veev and Mighty Buildings — keeping a plant full, and trucking houses. A real insight, not marketing.
- Nothing shows it completing houses. The whole market has rebuilt only ~1.5% of what burned — but a competitor holds a certificate of occupancy on a factory-built rebuild, and this company does not.
- The prize is bounded. Framing is ~16.6% of build cost, so 80% off framing is ~13% off the house, against a 30% claim.

WHAT WOULD CHANGE IT

- One occupied house, with its build time and final cost against contract.
- A contractor licence number that resolves on the state register.
- Evidence of a raise after the $1.5M of March 2024.

HIGHEST-LEVERAGE UNKNOWNNS

People needed to run a job — top of the sensitivity ranking, and the direct test of the claimed 60% labour saving.
Gross margin already achieved — margin decides this, not volume. Ask for the job-cost ledger.
Cash on hand — $1.5M disclosed against ~$3.4M of annual operating expense.

One page of a 19-page workup. Eighteen of the 53 numbers behind it are the company's own account, so the quantified case is conditional; the negative case rests on public registers.
